Writing and Creating Case Studies (Midterm)

In small groups, students will be asked to create a case study (3-4 pages) that will be shared with other sections of the course to reflect on and solve. Additionally, the case study must include a Learning Guide that will be used to show how to best address the case study (2-3 pages). Students will pick one topic they would like their case study to address that is relevant to undergraduate students. The case studies may also be linked to one of OSUN's themes.

The Case Study will need to include the following:

- Awareness > Analysis > Action
- Decision Point of the issue being presented
- Subject Matter
- Protagonist
- Organizational Context
- External Context
- Case Conclusion with the values issue in hand
- Create contexts that an undergraduate student may face for example: at an internship, class working teams, summer jobs, athletic teams, or other relevant contexts. Contact your instructor for advice as appropriate.
- Use disguised or generic names for the individuals and organizations, both in your product and in your group discussions. And remind your team regularly that their agreement to respect confidentiality is a condition for this project. And of course, remember to respect and honor all confidentiality agreements with the relevant organizations.
- The case should be brief (three to four pages) and should end at the point where the case protagonist knows what they believe is the right thing to do, but wonders how to get it done; what to say; to whom; in what sequence, and so forth. Include enough detail so that someone reading the case would be able to generate ideas and suggestions about how the protagonist might proceed effectively.
- Citations must be done in APA style format

The Learning Guide will include the following:

- a brief introduction (no more than a page) to the issue at hand: what the challenge is; what is at stake;

- 3-4 lenses for looking at it, and the like identification of the courses for which this case is best suited and why (this should include Reasons and Rationalizations as well as Levers that reader should use)
- The outcomes of each of the lenses you chose to solve the issue.

List of Learning Objectives for the case and Key Takeaways3-5 questions your group would like the readers of the case study to consider. Bibliography of 2-3 articles, publications or writings from the course that inspired your case study. Citations must done in APA style format
If you have questions about APA, please see the APA guidelines document.
